Crosbie Gliner Schiffman Southard & Swanson LLP (CGS3), a recognized leader among Southern California commercial real estate law firms, has promoted Amelia Sanchez from senior counsel to partner.

"We are thrilled to elevate Amelia to this important role," said Sean Southard, a CGS3 founding partner. "Her strong work ethic, as well as a proven track record achieving core business objectives, resolving complex issues and completing transactions through strategic and efficient legal negotiations, is exactly the professionalism and expertise our clients expect."

The promotion is part of the firm's new plan for continued strategic growth. "Over the coming weeks, we will be announcing key additions to our best-in-class legal team as well as adding expanded practice areas," Southard said. "Amelia is a key part of CGS3's forward-thinking business model and talented legal team, all of whom have a proven track record of responding to a growing client demand for specialized law firms that are focused and excel in their practice niche."

With over 20 years of commercial real estate and transactional experience, Sanchez has successfully represented companies in all asset categories – supporting and advising clients on leasing transactions that include retail, office, financial, life science, mixed use, industrial, telecommunications and solar leases and on purchase and sale transactions.

Prior to joining CGS3, she was senior legal counsel for Cricket Communications in San Diego and also worked at Newland Communities and Sheppard Mullin Richter & Hampton.

She holds a J.D. from USD School of Law, and a Bachelor of Arts in psychology from Dartmouth. Amelia can be reached at <http://www.cgs3.com>.
