2021 WOMEN IN LAW PROFILES

FERRUZZO

CHERYL BARRETT

FERRUZZO & FERRUZZO, LLP

What differentiates an attorney who does estate planning from an excellent estate planning attorney? Two words: Experience and Empathy. Cheryl Barrett's long time practice is people oriented and she is highly sensitive to the fact that estate planning deals with the two subjects dreaded by most people, death and taxation. The gift that Cheryl brings to her clients is her ability to break down complex issues and move past the attorney and IRS lexicons in a manner that people can understand and apply to their personal goals and needs. When the need arises, Cheryl's trust administration skills can be relied upon to carry out her clients' wishes, and in cases where probate is required, Cheryl is able to guide clients through the rigors of the process.

Highly visible in the charitable community, Ms. Barrett has served on the Board of Directors for Goodwill Industries of Orange County for 17 years and was Chair of the Board. The association supports her affinity for the needs of the disabled and she has developed a niche with special needs trusts.

Ms. Barrett has been quoted by financial editors at the Orange County Register, Los Angeles Times, Huffington Post, and Business Insider. She has been a guest on KABC and KCAA radio talk shows.

When clients refer family members, there is no greater symbol of their confidence. Cheryl has been helping families for years. Ferruzzo & Ferruzzo is rooted in relationships and Cheryl is emblematic of that ethic.

KATIE BINKLEY

VETERANS LEGAL INSTITUTE

Katie Binkley is a lead staff attorney at Veterans Legal Institute where she predominantly practices family law litigation. She brings a trauma-informed approach to her cases to successfully empower her clients, many of whom suffer from conditions like Post Traumatic Stress Disorder (PTSD) or Traumatic Brain Injury (TBI). She has successfully reunited Veteran families by prioritizing children-focused solutions, rather than unnecessarily punitive or litigious strategies.

Public interest is the guiding value of Binkley's practice. Before joining Veterans Legal Institute, she staffed various committees and member offices ranging from the Arizona State Legislature to the U.S. House of Representatives. She also volunteered with the Homeless Legal Assistance Program during all three years of law school, leading bi-weekly legal aid clinics at the most populous homeless shelter in Maricopa County, Arizona. In 2018, she received the Judge Mary M. Schroeder Award for donating the most pro bono legal aid hours of all second-year students.

Binkley graduated with honors from Arizona State University with a concurrent degree in Political Science and Women's Studies, as well as earning a certificate in Political Entrepreneurship. She went on to earn her Juris Doctor from Sandra Day O'Connor College of Law. Most recently, she was recognized as one of Congressman Lou Correa's Women of the Year for 2021. She is admitted to practice in Arizona and California and accredited to practice before the Department of Veterans Affairs.

Cal.

Bird-Steiner is a Veteran of the United States Marine Corps, where she was an intelligence analyst. She presently sits on the military committee that advises Supervisor Katrina Foley about local Veterans' issues.

Bird-Steiner argued pro bono at the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit on behalf of Carey Avendano-Hernandez, a transgender woman from Mexico who was tortured by police and military officials, resulting in a published Ninth Circuit opinion granting relief under the Convention Against Torture.

Bird-Steiner sits on the board at Veterans Legal Institute and has increased her pro bono practice to serve her fellow Veterans. She has established strong rapport with female Veterans through Veterans Legal Institute (VLI), often giving them advice and counsel and representing them when they would otherwise not be able to access justice. Given her contributions to the US military and the veteran and legal communities, Bird-Steiner is being recognized as the 2021 VLI Veteran of the Year.

THE GOAL OF HELPING PEOPLE HAS ALWAYS BEEN

The Driving Force

As a former nurse,

current lawyer and longtime advocate of social justice, Jennifer Johnson has dedicated both her personal and professional life to making a difference in her community. "Often, the people I represent wouldn't have a voice," she says, "and that's why it's such an incredible honor to represent them in the court of law."

In her legal practice, Ms. Johnson concentrates on catastrophic personal injury, wrongful death, medical malpractice and elder abuse, providing injured individuals with committed and compassionate representation in Southern California and many other parts of the country. "I focus on cases that cry out for justice, because I strongly believe that access to justice is not a privilege for the few, but a right for all," she says.

Prior to attending law school, Ms. Johnson served in one of the country's most trusted professions—nursing. And in establishing her own law firm, she drew on her experience in that field, as well as on her expertise from working first at two prestigious defense firms and then at a national powerhouse plaintiff firm. "People often ask why I became a lawyer after already being a successful ICU- nurse," says Ms. Johnson, who has practiced law since 1992. "As a nurse and a lawyer, my motivation has been the same: to make a difference in people's lives."

COLLEEN MCCARTHY
FERRUZZO & FERRUZZO, LLP

Human Resources is in the DNA of Attorney Colleen McCarthy. The daughter of a Human Resources Professional and an Engineer, employment law and its impact on business was a regular topic at family dinners. McCarthy's recognition of the implications of her advice on a business gives her a unique approach to her practice.

As Chair of Ferruzzo's Employment Law Practice Group, McCarthy works hard to ensure her clients' immediate employment law needs are met, while identifying and remedying why the employer is facing a situation to reduce future risk. McCarthy finds that this is an important step that is often overlooked.

McCarthy has defended employers in litigation involving claims of discrimination, wrongful termination, wage and hour violations, harassment, unfair business practices, and violations of Title VII, the FEHA, FMLA, CFRA, ADA, and the ADEA. She has also represented employers in class action lawsuits and disputes with the U.S. Department of Labor, California's DLSE, Cal/OSHA, and before the Workers' Compensation Appeals Board in defense of Labor Code section 132a and serious and willful charges.

McCarthy teaches employers about the complicated employment laws that impact their businesses to reduce the chance of costly litigation. She regularly counsels clients on hiring/firing, employee discipline, leaves of absences, exempt classification, and independent contractor status. She conducts a variety of employer audits to identify and reduce risk, as well as policy development, employee handbooks, severance agreements, executive compensation, and commission and incentive agreements. McCarthy received her B.A. in English from USC and her J.D. from Pepperdine Law.

Women Make Great Rainmakers

With the intensified push towards diversity, inclusion and equality, an increasing opportunity looms large for the women who want to rise up in their profession. Women have always been known to lift each other up and generally be more inclusive in interactions within their firms and with clients. For those who want to develop more business and increase their positions within their firms, as well as in the community, now is the time to step up business development efforts. Women rainmakers typically enjoy higher earnings, have more job control and influence at their firms.

As we move through this pandemic, all professional service providers look for new and meaningful ways to not only enhance client relationships, but also to build new ones. These days it's all about helping clients, referral sources and potential clients to solve their problems. This is not the time to push for new business. It is the right time to step up and find creative ways to help others unscramble their business issues. Not all of their problems may be legal – that is the point. This is the time to put skin in the game and your clients will not forget.

Merry Neitlich

Consider being the resource to whom others turn to for guidance and connections. Help amplify the voices of those who are struggling to be heard. Women tend to be more inclusive and open to hearing other's viewpoints. This is what inclusivity and diversity truly means. It is not just having faces of many colors within a firm or at the table. Be that person who encourages everyone's voice to be heard.

Consider involving clients and targets on social media. Share their content, make a genuine and meaningful comment about their posts – don't just "like" it. Make frequent short posts adding content and value that clients are seeking. Post fresh ideas; make new connections about information by synthesizing existing content. Consider interviewing others for quotes you can put in your posts or articles. Since LinkedIn is the number one social media platform for business be certain your Profile page is completed. Forbes reports 67% of individuals will check out your LinkedIn Profile before website bio.

We learned from the 2008 recession that those who stayed visible and helped others were the ones whom recovered the quickest and deepest. Be that woman.

The Best Defense is a Good Offense: Trust Accounting

by Gina Lara, MBA, CFP®, EA

When the first request for a trust accounting came from one of six multi-generational trust beneficiaries, counsel noted that the request was not a formal petition for accounting filed with the Court. Counsel argued that preparation of a formal fiduciary accounting pursuant to California Probate Code requirements would be overkill. The trustee agreed; after all, she reasoned, the beneficiaries were all family.

A few years later, mired in interrogatories and document production, this trustee came to us with her newly appointed defense attorney and engaged us to prepare extensive formal court fiduciary accountings.

Why did this happen?

Trustees who are not presently seeking court approval have flexibility in the format of their trust accounting, but they still must meet certain substance requirements. Accounting in the probate code format is the best way to ensure these requirements are met and adequate disclosure has been made to all beneficiaries.

Gina Lara

A court fiduciary accounting is the most bulletproof documentation of trust activity. It is prepared using a very specific format based on the applicable financial reporting framework outlined in the Probate Code and is consistent with the Uniform Principal and Income Act (UPIA). Instead of the debits and credits that accountants typically report, fiduciary accountants report in terms of principal and income. Rather than preparation of balance sheets and income statements, fiduciary accountants prepare schedules such as Assets on Hand and Summary of Account.

The cost of an accounting prepared in probate code format is an administrative expense of the trust. It is immaterial in comparison to the cost of defending oneself in court for failure to adequately deliver timely accountings of trust money to beneficiaries. When it comes to trust accounting, the best defense is a good offense by filing proper fiduciary accountings each year.

thermometers, face masks, social distancing decals and sneeze guards have been set up throughout several common areas. The firm also implemented a visitor/vendor policy requiring all visitors/vendors have their temperatures taken prior to entering the office, placed a limitation on the number of visitors allowed in the office at any given time, and encourages deliveries be dropped off at the entrance of the office. Additionally, the firm relaxed its vacation and sick policies and requires that employees stay home when not feeling well or to take care of dependents, including children and elderly parents. Also, because of health and safety concerns pertaining to travel, the firm has limited non-essential business travel and requires pre-approval for any business trips.

Regarding technology, from its inception the firm's IT infrastructure has been progressive and cutting edge, including no in-office server. All the firm's applications are cloud based. Through the implementation of Azure AD and Multi Factor Authentication the firm can provide a high level of security and management control for its IT environment. The firm also invested in upgrading computers for all em-

The firm also implemented a policy to encourage employees to order office supplies for use at home, including stand up desks, dual monitors, printers, and standard office supplies. Lastly, the firm has started working on implementing regional work hubs and co-working spaces to provide more flexibility for employees.

Has the company returned to the office?

Our offices have been open since June for teams to use if they choose. Any official return

MAZDA NORTH AMERICAN OPERATIONS Company Statement

MNAO is committed to providing workplace options to employees that enable them to optimize their productivity and work-life balance, while having access to the tools and resources necessary to effectively perform in their role. MNAO's new 'virtual first' workplace model provides the ability for most positions in the organization to be performed remotely on a frequent or regular basis.

to the office had been delayed until Jan. 3, 2022.

What is your vaccine and mask policy?

We are following CDC and Cal/OSHA guidelines for employees in the office and wearing of a mask is recommended for all employees.

Have you made any changes to the office?

We are in the process of moving our offices to Spectrum Terrace, as such we have vacant desks in our current office at Park Place. This allows for employees who do come in to spread out organically. We sanitize every desk nightly to ensure it is available for use the next day by anyone who wants to use it.

EMILE HADDAD
Founder
FivePoint Holdings LLC

Have your employees returned to the office?

There are currently just four people working from our office full time, including myself, our COO, CFO and chief legal officer. We are waiting to see how current coronavirus trends play out before bringing everyone back. While the remote/hybrid model has worked well for us so far, I believe it is hard to maintain culture by being fully remote. Nothing can replace in-person connections and collaborations.

Have you made any changes to the office as a result of the pandemic?

We designed this office with an emphasis on common areas; it's an environment that encourages collaboration. One thing I will encourage more as people return to the office is outdoor meetings. I think walking meetings will be a great way to encourage employees to meet in a safe and active way.

Will you be requiring vaccination verification, testing, masks, etc.?

The vaccination discourse has been interesting. At first, I was somewhat in the camp of those who weren't sure about getting the vaccine, but ultimately realized it was the smartest and safest decision for me and my family. While I will encourage employees to get the vaccine, I won't mandate it. I'm more in favor of mandating masks in the office. ■

JP MORGAN CHASE & CO. Company Statement

We cannot overstate the importance of getting vaccinated and the firm offers lots of information and tools to help.

For our U.S. locations, we will align with the CDC's updated guidance and require all employees, regardless of vaccination status, to wear masks in public indoor settings and in common areas within our offices. Given that the CDC has stated more than 80% of counties across the U.S. have substantial or high community transmission rates, we will follow this guidance nationally for the time being.

The Business Journal encourages other local companies with notable and successful in-office, hybrid, and remote working policies to share their experiences for future articles. Email Editor Mark Mueller at mueller@ocbj.com with your stories.
